

NEVER include personal information on your resume, other than how to contact you. Employers might discriminate based upon health, age, or any number of other factors. Especially protect your social security number—don't give it to an employer until you have a job offer in hand.

Susan Spartan

Objective

To get a job with Pfizer Pharmaceuticals

What job? CEO? Maintenance?
This is too broad a statement.

Work experience

2001 - Present Wanker's Pub Waitress, 2381 Rhode Ave, East Lansing, MI 49227.

- Took orders and served food

Don't include addresses or phone numbers here. The important information is what you did in the job.

5-2002-8-2002 Rite Aid Pharmacy Technician, 8123 Island Ave, Escanaba, MI 19322

- Worked Cash register.

What did you learn? What skills did you develop? Did you interact with customers?

2001-2003, MSU East Lansing, MI, 48824

- BS in Zoology, GPA 3.5 of 4.0

When you graduate is more important than how long you have been at school. Always spell out MSU, since other universities have the same initials.

Education

Hobbies

Swimming, water skiing, and cooking

Unless it relates to the job applied for, don't put it on a resume.

It's probably better to put "References upon request." Your references are doing you a big favor, and you want to make sure they only get a call if it's important.

An exception is when you apply to a position that specifically states you must name references. In that case, references are typically listed on a separate page.
